

Full-time tenure-track academic position in Economics (international economics)

The candidate will teach at undergraduate and graduate levels, mainly in the field of international economics. The candidate will join the department of economics and the department of the evening programs. According to his/her research interests, the candidate will develop his/her research in one of the research centers of the Development Finance & Public Policies Institute (DeFiPP), ideally the Centre de recherches en Economie Régionale et Politique Economique (CERPE). He/she will take an active role in the departments and the faculty.

Academic environment

The position is at the department of economics and the department of the evening programs. With the faculty, the department of economics organizes the undergraduate program in economics and management. With the Université Catholique de Louvain (UCL), it organizes masters in economics and a graduate program in international and development economics. It also participates to the doctoral school in economics with other departments in Belgium. The department of the evening programs organizes a bachelor in economics and management sciences and masters in economics and management sciences.

Qualifications

The applicant:

- should hold a PhD in Economics by September 2018 (or have an equivalent qualification);
- should be able to publish excellent original research and develop contacts within the international research community;
- should be able to teach and to advise students at the bachelor, master and PhD levels;
- should have a good command of both spoken and written English and French.

The following features will be considered as assets:

- a significant scientific record supported by international high-level publications;
- a significant stay abroad;
- research related to the field of regional economics;
- a solid pedagogical experience, ideally also for an adult audience.

Information

Mathias HUNGERBUHLER, director of the department of economics, mathias.hungerbuhler@unmaur.be

Eric TOULEMONDE, director of the department of the evening programs, eric.toulemonde@unamur.be

Application and recruitment

The application must be received either through one of the internet platforms of EconJobMarket (<https://econjobmarket.org/>) or JOE (<https://www.aeaweb.org/joe/>) or by email at candidature@unamur.be before December 16th, 2017.

It must include:

- a curriculum vitae;
- three letters of recommendation that should be sent directly via the internet platforms or to the director of the department (mathias.hungerbuhler@unamur.be);
- a copy of at least one research paper;
- a teaching evaluation if available; and
- an application form that can be downloaded from <http://www.fundp.ac.be/universite/jobs/>.

The board of Administrators imposes a 2-year integration period for candidates appointed for the first time at an academic position within the institution. The confirmation of the appointment is taken at the end of this period.

Short-listed candidates will be invited to a research seminar and a presentation to the members of the department within two months following the closure of the application period.